VEGETABLE CATERPILLAR.

A Curious Combination of Animal and Plant Life.

Vegetable caterpillar is the name given to a fungus—Cordyceps robertii—found in New Zealand. It exhibits a curious and mysterious combination of animal and vegetable life and is invariably found associated as a parasite with the burdock caterpillar. How the spores of the fungus enter the insect, which has never yet been met with as a grub or moth, is not certainly known. Sir Joseph Hooker suggests they get lodged in its neck as it buries itself. At any rate, the fungus springs from the head of the buried insect and gradually absorbs its inside till the whole body becomes full of purely vegetable tissue, though in outward appearance it remains unchanged, head, legs and claws being seen clearly in detail. The pulpy vegetable matter has a nutty flavor and is eaten with relish by pigs and greedily devoured by the Maori wood men. The fungus, after growing to a height of about six inches, dies and dries up.—London Standard.

THE KNACK OF "KNOWING THINGS."

"To Know," twin-verb to the more widely discussed "To Do," is coming to take its rightful place in the "Creeds of the Workers."

"To Know" what, when, how "To Do," in the usual and normal situations that arise in our daily lives, is education—is equipment for emergencies, is POWER.

People, nowadays, are growing more and more fond of those facts which have a bearing on their daily lives. They are not averse to knowing the latest theory about gold deposits in the moon—but they take a closer interest in a special sale of gold jewelry at a local store.

They are sorry to learn that a great pianist is threatened with physical collapse—but the fact that there is a chance to buy pianos at greatly reduced prices at a local piano store is of actual, personal interest.

They are casually interested in the fact that the Czarina "manages" several hundreds of servants—but their own chances of securing ONE servant for general housework excite more genuine interest, and they search the "want ads" with more anxiety than they give to the "Foreign news and gossip."

They are amused at Uncle Sam's threat to buy his canal supplies in "the open market" of the world—but just what things for the home and office cost in the "open market" of their city interests them IN DETAIL, hence they keep "in touch" with the local stores by reading all of the ads.

They feel the horror and pity of the latest slaughter in Manchuria—but a good deal of grim satisfaction in an advertised "slaughter" of prices in two or three local stores.

And it is so with the whole range of the day's events—they are INTERESTED in the news; they are CONCERNED in the advertising. The news interests them in a non-personal way—the ads are like a live wire with one end attached to their pocketbooks.

So, while the newspaper, instructs and amuses and educates, it furnishes also, those other and better-liked facts which color and control the comings and goings and the buyings and sellings and gettings and givings of daily life. It cultivates in its readers "the knack of knowing things."

AVOID INFERIORITY.

Resolve That You Will Never Be Second Class in Anything.

It is said that Daniel Webster made the best chowder in his state on the principle that he would not be second class in anything. This is a good resolution with which to start out in your career. Resolve never to be second class in anything. No matter what you do, try to be a king in it. Have nothing to do with the inferior. Do your best in everything; deal with the best; choose the best; live up to your best.

One of the most successful men I know stamped his individuality upon everybody who knew him by this constant desire for the highest and the best in everything. No one could induce him to half do a thing or to accept an inferior article when a better was within his reach. Whether it was the quality and the style of his clothing or of anything he bought, he would allow nothing about him which was not the best obtainable. Even when poor and trying to get a start for himself, when others patronized cheap restaurants and obtained rooms in cheap localities, he would have none of these things.

He believed that his success depended largely upon following high ideals, upon keeping himself up to quality, upon his making a good impression, and he would not have anything to do with cheap or shoddy things. He shrank from inferiority and avoided it as he would poison, believing that it would taint his ideals, smirch his ambition and lower his standards. No cheap education was for him; no cheap books; no cheap shoddy clothing, or cheap manners. He had to have the best of everything.

His acquaintances thought that it was foolish and ruinous for him when trying to get a start for himself to spend his entire income in keeping up appearances or trying to keep in touch with the best people. He always considered that it was worth much to be thrown with people of culture and refinement and people of means, because he expected they would be his customers later in life. This young man believed that social success was imperative to his professional success, and he regarded his acquaintance among the better classes as of inestimable value.

His subsequent career certainly seemed to vindicate his methods. Although he had a hard struggle at first, he has attained great distinction and has been a marvel to his schoolmates and those who knew him in early life as a poor boy and who laughed at the lofty standard which he set for himself.

But the main value of this man's career is in its suggestion that we should allow nothing to enter the life that will deteriorate our ideals or lower our standard of quality. It teaches that keeping with the best, doing our best, insisting upon the best everywhere and always, will have a marked influence in elevating the life to the standard adopted.—Orison Swett Marden in Success Magazine.
